

Workers Solidarity Movement
Reasons to Bin the Bill
1994

Retrieved on 18th November 2021 from struggle.ws
Published in Workers Solidarity No. 43 — Autumn 1994.

theanarchistlibrary.org

Reasons to Bin the Bill

Workers Solidarity Movement

1994

- The average PAYE worker pays £3,565 in income tax each year, compared to £2,642 by the self-employed and just £575 by farmers.
- Last year PAYE workers paid £3,030 million — up £243.8 million on 1992 — due directly to the one per cent levy imposed by the same government which promised “tax reform”.
- The tax inspectors trade union says that last year £2,500 million was outstanding in taxes, and that with increased staffing much of this could be collected.
- Instead the government gave the rich their second tax amnesty inside five years. While we have to pay 48% they were let off with 15% and no questions asked. Hundreds of millions of pounds were simply written off, over ten times the total service charges levied throughout the 26 counties.
- The government refuses to raise the Rate Support Grant by £35 million, which could see all local charges abolished throughout the country. Yet they had no problem finding £35 million for the beef tribunal, much of which ended up in the pockets of their barrister pals.